Between the Lines

So This Is Co-Existing?

By DAVE PETERSON

Between the lines:

Pushy Khrushy's new program calls for catching the U.S. industrially by 1970 and for peaceful coexistence. As Adlai said, it's "coexistence or no existence." But is K preaching what he's practicing?

CIA chief Allen Dulles reportedly to lose his super-spy job to Wall Streeter. It had to come. Whether deserved or not, since the Cuban fiasco Allen has been tagged as "dull, duller, Dulles."

Manager of British bingo club quits after cleric calls bingo the "biggest sin of today." This sounds a bit like corn on the card. Wouldn't the "bango" of thermonuclear war be a little bigger sin?

After a spot of bird-dogging, British newsman calls female driving "terrifying." Having suffered the slings and arrows of a few female readers, we consider the rash courage of this reporter even more terrifying.

East German Reds denounce Mickey Mouse and his club to children as enemy agents, persuading East Germans to flee to West Germany. If Mickey can do this, the Reds must be running a pretty ratty show east of the border.

U.S. Senate hires French chef. Let's hope he cuts a little ham out of the diet of some of our "statesmen."

Las Vegas civil defense officer proposes 5,000-man militia to drive out California refugees in event of nuclear war. And we thought when the chips were down we were their friends.

New forest fire erupts out of control north of Weaverville. There's just one consolation in all our fires. We'll have been initiated if we end up in the hot place.

London coroner stoutly refuses to change his death list after "corpse" is found alive. What a break for the rigor mortis! No more taxes, bills or traffic tickets.

Golfer Tommy Bolt indefinitely suspended by PGA for using vile language in the men's locker room. If they sliced all of us off the links for that, golf would putter out completely.

Giants win another after Dark strips the bullpen bare. If Little Alvin would just clear the bench, we'd have some world champions.

Russkys say 6-year-old Siberian boy is "strong as an adult." Every poppa who's been poked in the snout by a 6-year-old knew that.

English farmer reports his cows each give two extra gallons daily when they watch TV. Scared out of them, no doubt.

Philadelphia mayor stoned and garbaged for proposing $40 annual fee for parking cars in front of homes. Imagine what might have happened to him elsewhere than in the City of Brotherly Love.

Ad headline: Shocked by the High Cost of Dying? We'll try to be if we can stop worrying about the high cost of living for a few minutes.

Draftees and reservists to be called in Berlin crisis. Life's funny peculiar all right. Not too long ago we were dying to wallop Berlin. And now we may be dying to defend it.
